

Chris Cohrs (PhD 2004, University of Bielefeld) is a lecturer in social psychology and works in the Centre for Research in Political Psychology at Queen's University Belfast. His research focuses on ideologies, political attitudes, prejudice, and psychological aspects of peace and conflict. Chris has been involved in ISPP for several years through conference presentations, serving on Political Psychology's editorial board, and acting as section co-chair and supporting the publishing roundtable at the 2009 conference. His goals for ISPP include encouraging international links among academics and enhancing possibilities of political psychology to influence policy and society in socially responsible ways.

<http://cohrs.socialpsychology.org>