

1-year Post-doc on Youth and Peace Science

University College Dublin (Ireland)

Applications due 11 July 2025

GENERATION PEACE does not ask how to protect 1.8 billion children in conflict-affected countries. Instead, it shows how youth – one-third of the world’s population – can build peace. This approach challenges the portrayal of youth as perpetrators, and positions youth as a driver of quality peace.

More specifically, this role will quantitatively examine the cross-national impact of youth peacebuilding on quality peace. We will produce a Youth Peacebuilding Indicator (YPI), compatible with cross-national databases, integrating (a) existing data on youth; (b) recode or ‘slice’ existing data to focus on youth; and (c) create additional variables within each domain. Supervised coding and Expert Review will ensure data compatibility and quality. Critical to identifying potential threats to endogeneity, multilevel analyses will be complemented by an instrumental variable test and sensitivity analyses to selection and bias. The relative degree of confidence in the YPI codes will also be modelled.
