Call for Blog Articles: Early Career Scholars 2024-25

Abstract Submission Deadline: November 29, 2024

The ISPP Blog publishes short articles about research or issues of interest to the political psychology community. The Early Career Committee (ECC) invites Early Career Scholars (graduate students or scholars who have received their PhD within the past 8 years) whether they are already ISPP members or willing to join, to contribute articles to the ISPP Blog. These articles are intended to promote the visibility of early career scholars and their research through our various online outlets and social media accounts.

Requirements for Submission:

We are interested in articles featuring research recently published as a peer-reviewed article or an open-access pre-print. The blog articles should be tailored for a non-specialist audience and can be submitted in Arabic, English, French, German, Greek, Hungarian, Japanese, Korean, Spanish or Turkish (which depend on the ECC in-house language capacities).

Key Guidelines:

- Articles should be between 800 and 1500 words.
- Adopt a journalistic style, utilizing the inverted pyramid format to present key elements in the opening paragraph(s).
- Avoid academic jargon and use simple terms to make the content accessible to a broader audience.

Content Criteria:

- Outline the data and methods used in the published research (e.g., survey, discourse analysis, experimental, interviews, etc.).
- Include broader social implications and, if applicable, practical implications.
- Provide a link to the published work (DOI or open repository link) and a list of references (including DOIs where possible).
- Ensure the article does not rely on unfounded opinions or conjecture; it should be substantiated with evidence.
- We welcome graphs, images and figures, but only if you are the author or have the copyright.

Additional Submission Materials:

- A brief author description (up to 50 words) including name, location, affiliation, and current position.
- A JPEG or PNG format photo of the author(s), preferably in portrait orientation with large file sizes.
- English abstract if the piece is written in another language.

Incentives:

Publishing your work on the ISPP blog offers a valuable opportunity to share your research, increase visibility, and foster potential collaborations. Your work will be permanently archived on the ISPP blog, enabling you to reference it in the future. Furthermore, ISPP will promote your research across its social media platforms, including 9.4k followers on X and 548 followers on LinkedIn, with over 2,000 impressions per month.

Submission Process:

Interested contributors should submit a 250-word abstract to ispp.ecc@gmail.com until November 29, 2024. Authors will receive feedback on their proposals, and after making the suggested corrections, articles will be posted on the blog in the current or next month.
